You will work alongside dedicated interdisciplinary teams in a highly supportive environment. There are no on-call duties and remuneration is provided through an attractive clinical service contract.

Cowichan Valley (Duncan)

The Cowichan Valley offers the opportunity to practice in a growing community with exciting developments underway. The new Cowichan District Hospital, opening in 2027, will expand services to 204 beds with opportunities to contribute to the design of seniors' care.

Physicians work as part of a collaborative interdisciplinary team alongside geriatric psychiatry, family physicians and other specialists, with strong connections to Home and Community Care. The role includes inpatient consultation up to two days per week and outpatient services supported by a growing team including nursing and allied health professionals.

Nanaimo

Nanaimo, Vancouver Island's second largest city, offers a dynamic and evolving environment for geriatric care. Physicians in Nanaimo are part of a broader integrated system that includes access to acute and rehabilitation programs across the Island.

There are strong opportunities for collaboration with geriatric psychiatry through a well-established Seniors Mental Health program. This includes working alongside multidisciplinary teams providing consultation across acute inpatient, outpatient and residential care settings. Physicians may also have the opportunity to expand their scope through outreach programs supporting rural and remote communities, including meaningful work with First Nations populations.

Teaching opportunities are available through the Island Medical Program, along with involvement in innovative initiatives such as the Island-wide Dementia Strategy. Nanaimo offers an exceptional balance of professional fulfillment and lifestyle, with easy access to outdoor recreation, a growing cultural scene and proximity to Vancouver.

Comox Valley

The Comox Valley offers a unique blend of coastal and mountain living paired with a supportive medical community. Physicians provide geriatric consultation services across inpatient and outpatient settings, working within interdisciplinary teams to support seniors throughout their care journey.

This region is ideal for those seeking a balance of rewarding clinical work and an active outdoor lifestyle.
